

Abstract

Indirect techniques have been used to obtain information about reaction rates for several proton capture reactions that occur on short - lived nuclei. The techniques used to carry out the measurements are reviewed and the results obtained are presented. Also future prospects for further measurements with a new facility, T - REX are discussed.

.